Who we are

In the UK today there are still 1 million children that cannot go online at home. This digital divide is leading to a significant under performance for poorer children that can lead to social and economic problems further down the line.

The e-Learning Foundation was established in 2001 and is the only national education charity dedicated to achieving digital inclusion for disadvantaged children. We do this by providing expertise and support so that children are able to access a computer and connect to the Internet at school as well as at home.

We work with schools to ensure that the computing devices are provided in an educational context. Since being established we now work with over 500 schools and over 100,000 children are currently benefiting from our programmes.

Why your support is important to us

Whatever the size of your company, you can still make a difference to the lives of these disadvantaged children by supporting us.

If your company wishes to have a working partnership with the e-Learning Foundation and support our work over a longer period, you can join our Corporate Partner Programme and pledge to make an unrestricted donation of at least £20,000 over a two year period.
